EDITORS' PREFACE.

In presenting these Vestiges to the British Public, it may not be widely known that the two authors, who have been engaged in this most arduous and important task, have been for many years past, in the most intimate and friendly relations with each other. It is not, however, the intention of the authors to present to the public a work which is the result of a joint effort, but rather a work which is the result of a long and friendly association, during which the authors have been engaged in a common task, and have been able to consult each other on all points of difficulty, and to discuss the merits and demerits of their respective views. It is not, however, the intention of the authors to present to the public a work which is the result of a joint effort, but rather a work which is the result of a long and friendly association, during which the authors have been engaged in a common task, and have been able to consult each other on all points of difficulty, and to discuss the merits and demerits of their respective views.

THE BOOK OF JOB.
INTRODUCTION.

THE reference to Job in the Scriptures has in every generation excited the interest of the pious. The story of his calamities, his sufferings, and his recovery, has been the subject of many a noble poem, and has been the theme of many a noble drama. It is not surprising that the Book of Job has been the subject of many a noble commentary, and that it has been the subject of many a noble treatise. It is not surprising that the Book of Job has been the subject of many a noble sermon, and that it has been the subject of many a noble prayer.

43 INTRODUCTION.

43 The first of the two chapters is a preface to the whole of the book. It is written in a simple and direct manner, and is the only part of the book in which the author speaks in his own person. The second chapter is the beginning of the drama, and is the only part of the book in which the author speaks in the person of the Lord. The third chapter is the beginning of the drama, and is the only part of the book in which the author speaks in the person of the Lord. The fourth chapter is the beginning of the drama, and is the only part of the book in which the author speaks in the person of the Lord. The fifth chapter is the beginning of the drama, and is the only part of the book in which the author speaks in the person of the Lord.

CHAPTER I
Introduction

Job is the story of a man who is afflicted with suffering. He is a man of integrity, who is not afraid of God, and who is not afraid of man. He is a man who is not afraid of suffering, and who is not afraid of death. He is a man who is not afraid of anything, and who is not afraid of anyone. He is a man who is not afraid of anything, and who is not afraid of anyone.

Introduction

The whole subject is in a sense (or is it?) to be considered in its own right. It is not a mere study of a text, but a study of a man, and of a man's attitude to his God. It is a study of a man who is not only a man, but a man who is also a man of letters, and who is also a man of letters who is also a man of letters. It is a study of a man who is not only a man, but a man who is also a man of letters, and who is also a man of letters who is also a man of letters. It is a study of a man who is not only a man, but a man who is also a man of letters, and who is also a man of letters who is also a man of letters.

Job introduction

1. The Hebrew text is in the form of a poem. It is written in a style which is characteristic of the Hebrew of the period of the monarchy. It is in fact a collection of poems which have been put together by a compiler. The poems are of varying lengths and are written in different metres. The compiler has arranged them in a way which gives them a certain unity of theme and purpose. The poems are arranged in a way which suggests a certain order of thought. The compiler has also added a prologue and an epilogue. The prologue is a short poem which introduces the story of Job. The epilogue is a short poem which concludes the story of Job. The compiler has also added a title and a subtitle. The title is 'The Book of Job' and the subtitle is 'The Story of Job's Trials and His Faith'. The compiler has also added a preface and a postscript. The preface is a short poem which introduces the book. The postscript is a short poem which concludes the book. The compiler has also added a list of chapters and a list of verses. The list of chapters is as follows: Chapter I, Chapter II, Chapter III, Chapter IV, Chapter V, Chapter VI, Chapter VII, Chapter VIII, Chapter IX, Chapter X, Chapter XI, Chapter XII, Chapter XIII, Chapter XIV, Chapter XV, Chapter XVI, Chapter XVII, Chapter XVIII, Chapter XIX, Chapter XX, Chapter XXI, Chapter XXII, Chapter XXIII, Chapter XXIV, Chapter XXV, Chapter XXVI, Chapter XXVII, Chapter XXVIII, Chapter XXIX, Chapter XXX. THE BOOK OF JOB.

CHAPTER I.

1. There was a man in the land of Uz, whose name was Job; and he was a perfect and upright man, one that feared God, and eschewed evil.

CHAPTER II.

1. There was a day when the angels of God came to visit Job; and the Lord said unto the angels, Behold now Job, a perfect and upright man, one that fears God, and eschewed evil.

JOB.

2. And there were born unto him seven sons and three daughters.

3. His name was Eliphaz the firstborn, and Bilam the second, and Zophar the third, and Suvai the fourth, and Kailan the fifth, and Zerah the sixth, and Epumai the seventh.

4. And his three daughters were named, the eldest was called Jemima, and the middle one was called Keziah, and the youngest was called Keren-happuch.

5. And Job was the greatest of all the men of the east, because he was perfect and upright, and one that feared God, and eschewed evil.

CHAPTER I.

6. And the Lord said unto Satan, Whence comest thou? And Satan answered the Lord, saying, From the east.

7. And the Lord said unto Satan, Hast thou considered my servant Job, that he is a perfect and upright man, one that fears God, and eschewed evil?

8. And Satan answered the Lord, saying, Yea, I have considered him, and he is a perfect and upright man, one that fears God, and eschewed evil.

9. And the Lord said unto Satan, Behold now Job, a perfect and upright man, one that fears God, and eschewed evil.

And he said, I have heard that thou art a man of words, and that thou art despising thy God. Therefore I have said, Thou shalt be afraid of me, as man fears God, and shalt not despise me, as thou despisest God. For thou hast said, I will not reverence God, neither will I fear him: for I think that I am altogether free from his wrath, and that I shall not be troubled by him. Therefore I have said, Thou shalt be afraid of me, as man fears God, and shalt not despise me, as thou despisest God. For thou hast said, I will not reverence God, neither will I fear him: for I think that I am altogether free from his wrath, and that I shall not be troubled by him.

11. But, you say, what is the use of this? It is to show you that the world is not what it seems to be. It is to show you that the world is a vast and wonderful system, and that we are only a small part of it. It is to show you that the world is full of beauty and interest, and that we should not be afraid to explore it. It is to show you that the world is a place where we can find happiness and fulfillment, and that we should not let our fears and doubts stand in our way.

As the man and lady approached the door, they were met by a young man in a blue coat and a woman in a pink dress. The man in the blue coat, who was the first to speak, said, "Welcome, my lords. I am glad to see you at last. My name is John, and I am the steward of the house. My lady is the woman in pink. I hope you will find everything to your liking here. The house is large and comfortable, and the garden is very fine. If you have any questions, please ask me. I will do my best to answer them to your satisfaction."

CHAPTER II

After the man and lady had taken their seats at the table, the man in the blue coat went to the kitchen to see that everything was in order. He found that the dinner had been prepared to the satisfaction of the cook, and he returned to the table with a look of contentment. The woman in pink, who had been watching him, said, "You seem to be a very capable man. I am sure you will do your duty well."

For they had made an appointment with them to meet at the same place, and to take with them a large quantity of arms, and to be ready to set out at the first opportunity. They were, however, disappointed in this respect, for they found that the arms had been taken away by the British, and that the only chance of success was to attack them on their march.

The British, on the other hand, were not without their precautions. They had sent out a detachment of troops to guard the roads, and to keep a close watch on the movements of the rebels. They were, therefore, well prepared to meet any attempt on the part of the rebels to attack them.

The result of the battle was, therefore, a complete victory for the British. The rebels were scattered in all directions, and many of them were killed. The British, on the other hand, were not only successful in their military operations, but they were also able to maintain the peace and order of the country.

When the general news of the success of the British was known, the rebels were in a state of great confusion. They were not only scattered in all directions, but they were also in a state of great fear. They were, therefore, unable to carry out their plan of attacking the British.

The British, on the other hand, were in a state of great triumph. They were not only successful in their military operations, but they were also able to maintain the peace and order of the country. They were, therefore, well prepared to meet any attempt on the part of the rebels to attack them.

CHAPTER V. 151

When we see some men, who, by the means of a little money, have got into a high station, and are seen to be in the possession of it, we are often tempted to envy them, and to wish that we were in their stead. But when we have had time to reflect on their condition, we shall find that it is not so glorious as it seems. They are often surrounded by a host of enemies, who are ready to seize upon their power, and to strip them of it. They are often in the midst of dissensions and factions, and are obliged to spend much of their time in the management of them. They are often in the possession of a power, which is not only burdensome, but dangerous. They are often in the possession of a power, which is not only burdensome, but dangerous. They are often in the possession of a power, which is not only burdensome, but dangerous.

178 JOB.

1 I have not concealed the words of my lips: I will speak as soon as I shall be asked. I will not withhold myself from saying what I think.

2 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

3 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

4 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

5 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

6 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

7 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

8 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

9 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

10 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

11 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

12 I have not hid my heart from thee, O LORD: I will not keep back my mouth from speaking truth.

CHAPTER XIII. 253
I O, what wilt thou do, my dear, if I should die? I would wish my death to be as quiet as a dove's, and my soul to be as pure as a child's. I would wish to be as good as a saint, and as true as a man. I would wish to be as brave as a hero, and as wise as a philosopher. I would wish to be as kind as an angel, and as merciful as a father. I would wish to be as patient as a saint, and as forgiving as a king. I would wish to be as gentle as a lamb, and as meek as a dove. I would wish to be as lowly as a servant, and as humble as a slave. I would wish to be as simple as a child, and as unassuming as a peasant. I would wish to be as pure as a snowflake, and as clear as a crystal. I would wish to be as bright as a star, and as shining as a sun. I would wish to be as sweet as a flower, and as fragrant as a perfume. I would wish to be as soft as a cloud, and as gentle as a breeze. I would wish to be as warm as a fire, and as comforting as a blanket. I would wish to be as strong as a lion, and as brave as a warrior. I would wish to be as wise as an owl, and as thoughtful as a philosopher. I would wish to be as kind as a mother, and as loving as a friend. I would wish to be as good as a saint, and as true as a man. I would wish to be as brave as a hero, and as wise as a philosopher. I would wish to be as kind as an angel, and as merciful as a father. CHAPTER XIII. 255
I O, what wilt thou do, my dear, if I should die? I would wish my death to be as quiet as a dove's, and my soul to be as pure as a child's. I would wish to be as good as a saint, and as true as a man. I would wish to be as brave as a hero, and as wise as a philosopher. I would wish to be as kind as an angel, and as merciful as a father. I would wish to be as patient as a saint, and as forgiving as a king. I would wish to be as gentle as a lamb, and as meek as a dove. I would wish to be as lowly as a servant, and as humble as a slave. I would wish to be as simple as a child, and as unassuming as a peasant. I would wish to be as pure as a snowflake, and as clear as a crystal. I would wish to be as bright as a star, and as shining as a sun. I would wish to be as sweet as a flower, and as fragrant as a perfume. I would wish to be as soft as a cloud, and as gentle as a breeze. I would wish to be as warm as a fire, and as comforting as a blanket. I would wish to be as strong as a lion, and as brave as a warrior. I would wish to be as wise as an owl, and as thoughtful as a philosopher. I would wish to be as kind as a mother, and as loving as a friend.

CHAPTER XIV.
271 So the man took down, and thrust; So did they wallow'd like
the chaff that blows in the wind; and as the grass that blows, and
and of itself is blown about; and as the grass that blows, and
and of itself is blown about;
272 So the man took down, and thrust; So did they wallow'd like
the chaff that blows in the wind; and as the grass that blows, and
and of itself is blown about; and as the grass that blows, and
and of itself is blown about;

273 Is it a man that shall be safe, when will I will, will my charge
keep all the day for my reward? I know, because I know that I will
and I will keep it all the day for my reward. I know, because I know that I will
and I will keep it all the day for my reward.
274 Is it a man that shall be safe, when will I will, will my charge
keep all the day for my reward? I know, because I know that I will
and I will keep it all the day for my reward. I know, because I know that I will
and I will keep it all the day for my reward.

274 JOB. 18 And now the apostrophe: "Then a man will say the things that I say, and he will say that I have said, and he will say that I have said, and he will say that I have said." This is the first of the apostrophes in the book of Job. It is a very important one, for it is the first time that Job is speaking to himself. He is speaking to himself as if he were speaking to someone else. This is a very important part of the book of Job, for it shows that Job is not just a passive sufferer, but a man who is actively engaged in a struggle with God. He is not just accepting his fate, but he is questioning it. He is not just complaining, but he is arguing. He is not just crying out in pain, but he is crying out in protest. This is a very important part of the book of Job, for it shows that Job is a man of faith, a man who believes in God, but a man who is not afraid to question God. He is a man who is not just a passive sufferer, but a man who is actively engaged in a struggle with God. He is not just accepting his fate, but he is questioning it. He is not just complaining, but he is arguing. He is not just crying out in pain, but he is crying out in protest. This is a very important part of the book of Job, for it shows that Job is a man of faith, a man who believes in God, but a man who is not afraid to question God.

CHAPTER XIV. 29. Then I will say to the Lord, "I have heard that I have heard, and I have seen that I have seen, and I have touched that I have touched, and I have smelled that I have smelled, and I have tasted that I have tasted, and I have felt that I have felt, and I have thought that I have thought, and I have known that I have known, and I have understood that I have understood, and I have felt that I have felt, and I have thought that I have thought, and I have known that I have known, and I have understood that I have understood." This is the second of the apostrophes in the book of Job. It is a very important one, for it is the first time that Job is speaking to God. He is speaking to God as if he were speaking to someone else. This is a very important part of the book of Job, for it shows that Job is not just a passive sufferer, but a man who is actively engaged in a struggle with God. 181 He stretcheth out his hands against heaven, and saith,
Why do I contend?
182 Why do I strive?
183 Why do I continually
multiply my words?
184 Why do I enlarge my
words?
185 For I have heard that he saith, I will not justify the wicked, nor will I make liars my friends:
186 For I am afraid of the
punishment of his wrath,
because he will destroy
me, and will call me
his enemy, and will stretch out his hand against me, and will
break down my tower,
and will bring down my
stronghold.
187 Therefore will I not

CHAPTER XIX
The first of these things which I have seen in the world, and the first of the things which I have seen in the world, is the fact that the world is not what it seems to be. It is a vast and wonderful place, full of mysteries and wonders, and it is a place where the things which we see are only the tip of the iceberg of a much larger and more complex reality. The things which we see are only the surface of a much deeper and more mysterious world, and it is a world which is full of wonders and mysteries, and it is a world which is full of things which we do not understand. The things which we see are only the tip of the iceberg of a much larger and more complex reality, and it is a reality which is full of wonders and mysteries, and it is a reality which is full of things which we do not understand.

CHAPTER XXI.

In the first case of the subject, it is not necessary to consider the general principles of the law, but to look at the particular facts of the case. The law is not to be applied to the facts, but the facts to the law. The law is to be applied to the facts, and not the facts to the law. The law is to be applied to the facts, and not the facts to the law. The law is to be applied to the facts, and not the facts to the law.
